TWO TRAVELERS.

The hour is midnight, hushed and still The starlight rests on meed and hill; The world lies bathed in restful sleep, Save only these who watch and weep, Save only those who vigil keep, And wait in wee or wait in cheer, The death-knell of the passing year.

Two angels, clothed in glory bright, Fling open wide the Gates of Light. From whence a traveler, clothed in white-A baby New Year, soft and fair-Comes floating downward through the air.

When in his path a traveler stands : The weary body, bent with care, Its sinfut burden scarce can bear. With toil the Old Year mounts the air, When, struggling through the ether mild, His glance falls on the heaven-born child.

The gray-beard's tones are old and weak; In wear ness his tongue doth speak : "A twelvemonth since I left the sky, Sent forth by Him who reigns on high, On earth to live, on earth to die. Lo! I return to whence I came, Bowed down with toil and sin and shame."

In dread the New Year lifts his eyes To you bright region of the skies: "Not so, O Father, oh, not so May be the fate to which I go! In I ve I'll live with men below Ob, I will bid their souls rejoice, And beg a welcome with my voice.

> 'Out of the darkness, out of night, Springing to meet the morning light, Leaving the nebulous upper world, My tiny wings to the air unfurled, Out of the ether and out of space, Trusting myself to your tender grace, Begging a welcome sweet and fair, Love and mercy and gentle care, I come, the glad New Year.

What did ye do to him who passed, Borne away on the wintry blast? I mat a traveler, old and wern, His brow was bent and his robe was torn Not to me may the same fate be, Bright and joyous and pure and free, Lo! from the realms of light above, Bearing to mortals a Fatner's love, I come, the glad New Year.'

In joy he comes the gentle child, A gift from Heaven in mercy mild; He comes to greet the world alone, The glad, sweet New Year, not our own, A spirit from Jehovah's throne. Not like the Old Year may be go, Bewed down with weight of mortal woe, th! many a victory may he win O'er doubt and pain, o er grief and sin, That not in vain his tender voice, Shall hid the soul of men "Rejoice!" The babe that knows not gri-f nor fear. The Father's gift, the glad New Year!

Scraps of History.

MR. EDITOR: The following is an extract from the "Gazetteer of the Western Continent, by Jedidiah Morse, D. D. A. A. S. S. H. S., July, 1810." I give the punctuation and spelling as I find it in the old book ;

"Knoxville, a post town, the metropolis of the State of Tennessee, situated in Knox county, on N. side of Holston river, where it is 300 yards in width, on a beautiful spot of ground 22 miles above the junction of the Holston river with the Tenners e, and 4 below the mouth of the French Broad river. It is flourishing, and enj ys a communication by post with every part of the United States. It is regularly laid out, and contains 518 inhabitants, a court house, jail, and ton are held here half yearly, and courts of pleas and quarter ressions for Knox county are held here. A college has been established by Government, Called Blount College. It is 32 miles N. of Tellico Block House; 200 S. E by S. of Frankfort in Kentucky; 485 W. by. "Nashville, a post town of Mero District in Tennessee, pleasantly situated in Davidson county, on the south bank of Cumberland River, where it is 200 yards broad. It was named after Brigadier-General Francis Nash, who fell on the 4th of October, 1777, in the battle of Germantown. It is regularly laid out and contains 345 inhabitants, a court bouse, gaol, an academy liberally endowed, a church for Presbyterians, and one for Methodists. It is the seat for the courts held semi-annually for the District of Mero, and of the court of pleas, and quarto ressions for Davidson county. It is 185 miles w, of Knoxville, 66 from Bg Salt Lick Garrison, 190 s. by w. of Lexington in Kentucky, 605 w. by s. of Rici mond in Virginia, and 1015 w. s. w. of Philadelphia, n. lat. 35, 45; w. lon. 87, 8. The exercises were of an interesting character, interspersed with music by the school. In the midst of an interesting song entitled "Jesus is King," the curtains were quickly drawn aside and a brilliantly lighted tree loaded with nice presents, burst upon the view, amid a joyous greeting by the audience. The children were wild with delight, while each one received a large bag of can dy and a choice present besides.

This is a flourishing school, and while very many deserve praise for their efforts in behalf of all its inter ests, yet no one has done more in the erection of this church and the building up of a large Suday school than ---
